The Postcolonial Condition

Postcoloniality awaits consignment to oblivion.

Rukmini Bhaya Nair

I posted a postcolonial poster from the Postogola post office in puran Dhaka, addressed to the right reverend postmaster general in Portsmouth;
and eagerly waited for a kind reply.
To my absolute disappointment,
the (im)poster came back, a few weeks later,
with the stamps all missing; old habit dies hard!
At the upper right corner where the stamps have been was written in a crooked hand—not arrived yet—return it to sender.
The postcolonial poster now hangs in my cool study, gathering grime, the fringes yellowing with the passage of time.
