FOOD PRICES

Newspaper and Opposition claims that food prices in Adelaide had been shown by Commonwealth Bureau of Census and Statistics figures to be higher than in other capital cities were completely baseless, the Premier, Mr. Dunstan, said today.

A check of food prices in two national supermarket chains by the South Australian Prices Commissioner plainly showed that grocery prices are lower in Adelaide than in Sydney or Melbourne, Mr. Dunstan said.

"The Commonwealth Statistician has clearly emphasised that the Bureau list is compiled on the basis of movements in food prices and not on the basis of absolute comparisons.

"The Prices Commissioner made his survey on the basis of comparative food prices, which showed that grocery prices in Adelaide were lower than either Sydney or Melbourne and that other food prices varied with seasonal conditions.

"It is obviously not true to say that Adelaide has the highest food prices in Australia", the Premier said.

Mr. Dunstan was elaborating outside the House on a written reply to a question from the Deputy Leader of the Opposition, Mr. Roger Goldsworthy.
